With a career spanning more than two decades in the sporting goods industry, you'd think that Mairy E. Lloyd is already settled in her life. However, her successful career in the sporting goods industry, both as a designer and manufacturer, did not satisfy her inner longing—to find inner peace and spiritual clarity. Her quest to find inner peace and spiritual clarity brought her to visit different parts of the globe—from Bhutan to Nepal, to Istanbul, to Jerusalem, and then to Jordan.

All throughout her quest, she has come to realize that the journey is as important as that of the objective. And these sentiments are embodied by Elizabeth Highland, her resolute protagonist in The Chronicles of Elizabeth Highland. Like Lloyd, Elizabeth's quest for love brought her spiritual awakening and so much more.

Susan Savion was a teacher who specialized in reading. As an educator, she researched and published a book about one of the key figures in the women's suffrage movement in the nineteenth century. Her book Quoting Matilda chronicled the achievements and quotes of Matilda Joslyn Gage, a daughter of abolitionists and a women's suffrage advocate, whose existence and contribution to women's movement had been overlooked by history books. Additionally, the book described other key historical figures who championed for equality, abolition of slavery, and women's rights.

Quoting Matilda is all about empowerment and the gentle strength of women throughout history as embodied by one empowered and strong woman—Matilda Joslyn Gage.

Jill E. Kinkel

Everything is connected, especially our past, present, and future. And this is the overlaying theme in Jill E. Kinkel's A Journey Through the Labyrinth of Time, where she invites readers to ruminate on the past to understand it and help readers improve their behaviors for the future.
