Iris M. Sidhu was born in Puerto Rico and raised in New York City. As a teenager, she was sent to her maternal grandmother, who took care of her until she reached eighteen. She grew up in a volatile environment, filled with crime and drugs. But she managed to escape that life unscathed by focusing on the beauty New York City possessed and the solace that it brought her. She presently lives within Florida with her husband, three children, and five grandchildren. Her book, Like My Grandmother Used to Say is a collection of wise words, thoughts, and sayings that have guided her in her adult life.

Each quotation touches on a different aspect of life and can bring wisdom, reflection, and even humor to its readers. One of Iris's direct quotes from her grandmother is as follows. "When in doubt, always overdress."

An entrepreneur, husband, father, grandfather, and a US marine, DJ Power was born in the suburbs of Boston, Massachusetts. He joined the Marines in 1963. He proudly served for six years, with two years of duty in South Vietnam.

From being a marine, he worked for American Airlines as a reservation agent and exited as the Western Division Director of Special Services after twenty-five years. After a few years, he worked as a resident manager for a hotel in Irving, Texas. He retired for good after that and returned to California.

DJ Power's upcoming trilogy—Tears of an Assassin, A Shooter's Moon: A Vietnam Story, and From Hell to Home: The Final Vietnam Story—is about the journey of a soldier named Jim Coleman.
